Permanent Link to Aeroflex Introduces Portable Positional Simulator for GPS/Galileo Receivers

2021/06/08

Aeroflex has introduced the GPSG-1000, a portable GPS and Galileo positional simulator. The GPSG-1000 is lightweight and configurable. It fills a gap in the market by providing a low-cost 12-channel test set that creates three-dimensional simulations, Aeroflex said. With the advent of GPS signal modernization, many GPS simulators on the market today are now obsolete, according to the company, which is based in Wichita, Kansas. The GPSG-1000 supports civil and military avionics field and bench maintenance technicians, production test technicians, and system integrators with a modern simulator for L1, C/A code and L1C, L2C, L5 GPS modernization signals, as well as new Galileo E1, E5, E6 services. It can be configured with single channel, 6-channel, or 12-channel simulation. Typical tests include acquisition sensitivity, tracking sensitivity, time-to-first-fix for cold/warm/hot starts, time-to-second-fix, positional accuracy, RAIM failure tolerance, and subsystem stimulation for 3D flight execution. The Aeroflex GPSG-1000 uses modular technology for RF and baseband signal generation to produce highly accurate and repeatable test results. Unlike bench top simulators, Aeroflex's approach also allows the test system to be upgraded at low cost. Features include: Simulation of GPS L1C, L2C, L5 signals, supporting the modernization of signals used by the latest designs of GPS receivers. Simulation of Galileo E1, E5, E6 signals to support unencrypted services. SBAS, WAAS/EGNOS L1, L5, for automatic SBAS simulation. Built-in GPS C/A code receiver for automatic GPS almanac download. Waypoint navigation, a 3D-navigation scheme that allows airport-to-airport flight plan simulation. Programmable satellite parameters allow specific tests to be conducted to determine receiver behaviour under degraded or invalid signal conditions. Dynamic satellite signal simulation for real-world constellation signal conditions. The GPSG-1000 Portable Positional Simulator is available in single channel, 6-channel, and 12-channel configurations. The GPSG-1000 is available in 16 weeks upon receipt of order.
